The Mountain of Echoes

Riya loved exploring nature, and her favourite place was the wide forest behind her school. One Saturday morning, her class went on a field trip to the Mountain of Echoes, a tall hill known for its strange sound pattern. Their teacher, Mr. Kumar, explained, "This mountain repeats whatever you say. But it also teaches an important lesson."

Curious, Riya hurried ahead with her friend Dan. When they reached the echo spot, Dan shouted, "This place is boring." A moment later, the mountain echoed back, "Boring... boring... boring..." The students laughed, but Riya frowned. The mountain's voice sounded dull and unfriendly.

Riya stepped forward and called, "This place is beautiful!" Instantly, the mountain replied, "Beautiful... beautiful... beautiful..."

The little lantern

Mira lived in a small village where every house had a bright lantern hanging by the door. One day, the wind blew so strongly that many lanterns went out.
When Mira stepped out, she saw that her neighbour Mr. Tan's lantern was no longer shining. He looked worried because his grandchildren were visiting that night, and he wanted the house
to look cheerful.

Mira still had her own lantern shining gloriously brightly. She thought for a moment, then carefully carried it to Mr. Tan's house. "Here," she said, "You can use my lantern. I can always light another later."

Mr. Tan's eyes sparkled with gratitude.
"Thank you, Mira," he said softly.
"Your kindness brings more light than any lantern."
