STUDENT SPOTLIGHT

THE LIGHT THAT NEVER GAVE UP

Everyone in Aarav's class thought he was an ordinary boy. He was quiet, made mistakes, and was never the fastest runner or the highest scorer. Whenever something was difficult, he wanted to give up.

One day, his grandmother gave him a small candle. She lit it and said, "A tiny flame can brighten a dark room. Its strength is not in its size, but in the fact that it keeps burning."

Those words stayed in Aarav's mind.

The next week, his school announced a science exhibition. Aarav decided to participate. His first model broke. His second experiment failed. Some classmates laughed and told him to quit. He remembered the little candle and his grandmother's words. Instead of giving up, he learned from each mistake and kept improving.

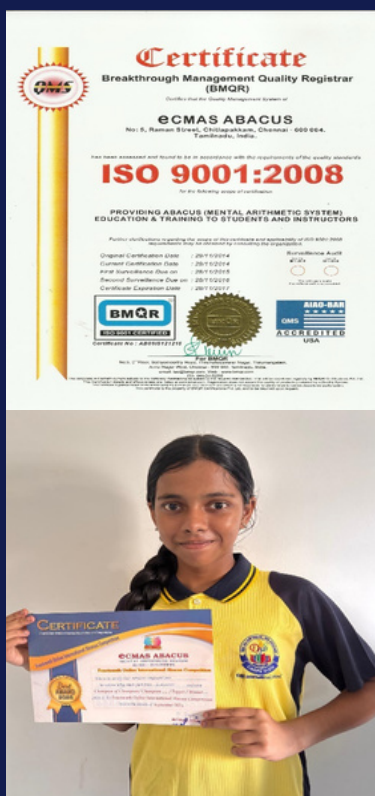

After many days of hard work, Aarav completed a working model. He did not win first prize, but he received a special award for determination and creativity. More importantly, he discovered that success comes to those who keep trying.

Years later, Aarav became an engineer who designed affordable solar lamps for villages without electricity. Whenever someone asked him what inspired him, he smiled and said, "A small candle taught me that even the smallest light can chase away darkness."

Moral: True inspiration comes from perseverance, hope, and the courage to keep moving forward, even when the journey is difficult.
